

Aly Damianakes
#306
March 9th 2004

To Build a Fire

In the short story, "To Build a Fire" by Jack London, a man was stuck fighting for survival in the Yukon Territory during the winter. The extreme temperatures combined with the mans stupidity led to his downfall in the cruel harsh winter. He made some very dim decisions along the way which he paid for in the end. All in all the environment didn't kill the man, his stupidity did.