

There are three truly beautiful scenes in nature. These include the sky, the forest, and the ocean. These are all very beautiful and interesting scenes to look at.

The sky is a very captivating scene. The sunsets are absolutely breathtaking. The clouds can form many different and interesting shapes. At night the sky becomes enchanting and glorious. When the stars are out the sky is undeniably exquisite. The sky's deep shades range from blue at dawn to deep oranges and purple at dusk. The sky scenes are genuinely picturesque.

The forest changes its scenery in seasons instead of day and night like the sky. In the summer the forest is filled with majestic shades of green. The fall brings colorful shades of oranges, reds, and yellows. The winter deprives the forest of its colorful splendor, but brings a different type of beauty all together. In the spring all of the green magnificence returns. The forest is breathtaking anytime of the year.

The ocean does not change with the seasons or day and night. The ocean holds its beauty constantly. The different parts of the world embrace eccentric colors of the ocean. In the Caribbean exotic crystal clear waters embrace the white sandy beaches. Yet the bays of Maine and Boston grasp the deep greens. The coast of California holds the deep blues of the Pacific. The ocean varies with its location.

The different scenes of nature are very intriguing. Whether it is the sky, the forest, or the ocean one may enjoy them anytime of the year day or night.
