

Personal Response
By: Brian Bass

In High School I never had the opportunity to write a paper like this. For the most part I'm used to writing research papers and other non-sense. This paper was a lot more unique and interesting. Being a film major, it is important to be able to view films and then analyze them. This project is the perfect movement towards learning how to master that well.

I admit that my writing can be confusing and un-organized but by writing papers like these I hope to change that statement. It is so much easier and enjoyable to write a paper about something that is meaningful and important like this film rather than a very dry research paper.

For future papers to come, I hope they are as interesting and meaningful as the topic of this paper. Hopefully in this class we will stray away from dull material and focus more on pop-culture/ current events in our writing but my primary motive to be in Expository Writing is to become a better writer. So whatever the topic may be, I am willing to do it as long as I am improving my writing skills.
